Eureka Gets Squirrely about Handing over Public Records

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

As a reporter who's worked in Humboldt County for more than a decade, the Eureka Police Department's May 2 clearing of the PalCo Marsh was something to behold. Chief Andrew Mills made sure there were independent observers, local clergy and a swarm of local media on site, all of them with unfettered access to roam the encampments and document what they saw. Whether that contributed to the remarkable combination of patience and respect officers showed the few dozen remaining homeless campers that day is unclear. But the message sent by Mills' decision to put EPD's actions under a microscope was unmistakable: He had nothing to hide and was accountable to the public.

So it was especially disappointing when, later that evening, the Journal received a letter from Eureka City Attorney Cyndy Day-Wilson denying a request for public documents that could help explain what led to the May 2 evictions. Our disappointment would only deepen in the weeks that followed.

You see, generally we at the Journal don't talk much about our document requests made under the California Public Records Act. We just submit them and then write about the information we get back. That's kind of how it's supposed to work.

But a May 10 press release from the city of Eureka turned that upside down, calling us out for threatening litigation and throwing out a scurrilous accusation that the Journal is somehow in bed with the American Civil Liberties Union and plaintiffs in a lawsuit against the city. The press release is strange, off base and, candidly, just bad governance, especially when one considers its context.

Described by another media outlet as "kind of bizarre," the release begins by offering a brief update on the federal lawsuit brought by 11 plaintiffs who allege the city violated their constitutional rights when evicting them from the PalCo Marsh. A federal judge has ordered the city to provide emergency shelter for the 11, and the city apparently wanted the public to know (through the press release) that six of the plaintiffs are currently staying in the converted shipping container project near Old Town and that the other five's whereabouts are unknown as they haven't taken the city up on its offer of shelter.

The release then notes the city had received an average of 31 "transient related calls" for police service per day and issued 18 illegal camping citations since the marsh was cleared on May 2. Apparently, the city wanted to make residents and the media aware that the clearing of the city's single largest homeless encampment had the effect of dispersing homeless campers throughout the city.

But things take an abrupt turn from there. The release states that the city has received "several" public records requests seeking documents and communications "regarding the broad catch-phrase 'homeless' or 'houseless' from the ACLU and the media." The city then notes its "concern" that these "entities" may be in cahoots with the PalCo Marsh plaintiffs, and is requesting city documents with the aim of slipping them over to the plaintiffs to aid their federal lawsuit. Then, in one final curve, the press release states the following:

"The City has received one threat of litigation from the North Coast Journal. Thaddeus [sic] Greenson of the North Coast Journal has requested City Council and upper management communications since Feb. 1, 2015 from a broad category of records related to "homeless." This request includes records related to the pending lawsuit and the city's decision-making process with regard to the May 2 move-out. The City has and continues to spend a significant amount of time and resources to respond to these PRAs. The city is taking steps to respond to this threat of litigation and will vigorously defend any lawsuit that is filed."

Well, seems like we've got some explaining to do, huh? Let's start with the accusation that we may be somehow conspiring with the PalCo Marsh plaintiffs to aid their case, which is 100 percent false and baseless. We have not spoken to any of the plaintiffs in the case about their lawsuit or about our records requests. Our end game in requesting documents from the city is a pretty straightforward one for a newspaper: We intend to read them and then, maybe, write about them.

But let's back up. The California Public Records Act was signed into law back in 1968 by Gov. Ronald Reagan. The main thrust of the act was laid out in its preamble: "Access to information concerning the conduct of the people's business is a fundamental and necessary right of every person in this state." The act requires state and local governments to make their documents and records available to members of the public upon request, save for some categories of records the Legislature felt wouldn't be in the public's best interest to disclose, things like documents related to police investigations, legal advice and the personal information of government employees. (After all, who would want to work for the government if it meant everyone had access to your social security number?)

Under the act, public agencies have 10 days to respond to any request for documents, though they can extend that period by another 14 days in "unusual circumstances." The agency must describe what records were found that were responsive to the request, and explain its reasons if it is choosing not to turn any of them over. While the act is a crucial tool for newsrooms throughout the state, it's also one available to anyone, which is its central tenet. It enables anyone with questions to file a request (nifty templates are available online). And the act is used widely and frequently. We regularly submit requests with local governments, as do journalism students, news agencies and curious citizens throughout the county and the state.

Since 1968, dealing with records requests has simply been an inherent part of being a public agency.

Now, back to our requests. The city didn't accurately represent them in the press release. First of all, they were submitted not by yours truly but by staff writer Linda Stansberry back on April 7. But that's a pretty trivial error. It gets better.

The first request asked for all written correspondences between city department heads, the city attorney and the city manager from Feb. 1, 2015 through April 7, 2016 about "the Devil's Playground, the Palco Marsh and homeless encampments." The second sought all written correspondences to and from members of the Eureka City Council and the mayor from Jan. 1, 2016 through April 7, 2016 regarding "homelessness within city limits."

Why are we seeking these documents? It's a fair question with a simple answer: We want to see what city department heads were saying to each other about the PalCo Marsh encampments from the time a personal injury lawsuit rendered those camps a massive liability for the city in February of 2015 through the city's setting the May 2 eviction date. Additionally, we wanted a glimpse at what council members were saying to and hearing from their constituents as the issue bubbled to a head. If that's nefarious, well, then, color us nefarious.

On April 8, the day after we asked the city for the documents, City Attorney Cyndy Day-Wilson told us the department head request would "require an extensive search and review of city records" and advised she was invoking the provision of the records act to extend the reply deadline out to 24 days. (On April 19, we received a letter advising the same extension would apply to the second request, as well). Fair enough.

On the 24th day, at 4:56 p.m. on May 2, four minutes prior to the city's legal response deadline, Day-Wilson fired off letters refusing to turn over a single email or note. "The city has reviewed your records request; the records requested are nondisclosable," Day-Wilson wrote, adding that she was invoking a pair of exemptions that protect documents related to pending litigation and attorney-client communications.

This struck us as a bit far-fetched; that in a broad stroke Day-Wilson could say a combined 17 months of emails and correspondences, including some between constituents and council members, were all classified as attorney-client communications or pertained to pending litigation. So on May 6, I sent off a (polite, I think) email to Day-Wilson and City Manager Greg Sparks asking the city to reconsider, pointing out our belief that only documents specifically prepared for use in litigation are exempt from disclosure under the law and that there is no attorney-client privilege that protects emails between elected officials and members of the public.

We concluded: "For these reasons we ask that you reconsider your blanket rejection of our two records requests. If I do not hear back from you by 5 p.m. on May 9, we will seek a judicial remedy."

So there's our threat of litigation. And wouldn't you know, at 5:06 p.m. on May 9 we received a long and somewhat cryptic letter from Day-Wilson explaining that the city disagrees with our interpretation of the exemptions of the CPRA and our interpretation of the city's response. "The city is well within its rights to not disclose the requested documents," she wrote, adding that because of unspecified similarities between our records requests and one filed by the American Civil Liberties Union back in February, "the City is suspicious of the motives that prompted Ms. Stansberry's request." (You can conduct your own review of the requests in the online version of this story to determine if you, too, should be suspicious of our motives.)

But Day-Wilson then quickly changed course to say "the city has reconsidered your request and has begun reviewing all of the correspondences that you requested. So far, the city has determined that it will disclose 72 pages."

"Has begun?" At this point, you might be asking yourself, "Didn't the city already review those documents? Didn't it determine them all to be 'nondisclosable,' as Day-Wilson phrased it? But now she's saying that her office has just 'begun reviewing' them and has already determined 72 pages are disclosable?" Yes. Yes. And, yes.

But it gets better. On May 11, we sent an email to Day-Wilson's legal assistant, Danielle Vickman (Day-Wilson has asked that we no longer contact her directly about this matter), to say that we'd like to get copies of those 72 pages. Day-Wilson wrote back to say that since the May 9 letter, the city "has located a significant amount of disclosable documents" and asked that the Journal make a $150 deposit to pay the 10-cents-per-page copying fees for all the records that are now deemed responsive to our request.

To recap, on May 2 everything we asked for was deemed "nondisclosable." Nine days later, there were so many records the city didn't want to begin copying them for us until we pre-paid for 1,500 of them. That about brings you up to speed. Thirty-five days after our initial request, we began to get our hands on some documents. Meanwhile, the city continues its review to determine, on second glance, what others — if any — the law might mandate be released. It's a process that the city estimates will take another three to four weeks. (As of our press deadline, the Journal has received 665 pages of documents.)

To be clear we haven't filed any lawsuit against the city and our only "threat," if the city wants to call it that, was stating that we disagreed with Day-Wilson's stance and, if necessary, would ask a judge to make sure the city complied with state law (there would be no monetary award in any such lawsuit). And, for the record, we aren't interested in wasting city employees' time or gumming up government with a bunch of worthless requests. We do, however, feel our requests are reasonable, given the public interest in the issue.

Honestly, this whole process has been frustrating. We hoped to put the May 2 evictions into a sharper focus, hoped to offer some insight into the city's year-long dilemma of what to do with the people in the PalCo Marsh. And we hoped to better understand how Eureka's elected leaders navigated the months surrounding the ultimate decision to move forward with clearing the marsh. We're confident we'll still be able to do some or all of that, but it looks like it's going to take longer than expected. We'll keep you updated, seeing as the city thinks folks are suddenly interested in the sausage making of journalism.

In the meantime, it seems appropriate to conclude with a passage from the California Public Records Act itself:

"The people of this state do not yield their sovereignty to the agencies which serve them. The people, in delegating authority, do not give their public servants the right to decide what is good for the people to know and what is not good for them to know. The people insist they may retain control over the instruments they have created." ●

Editor's note: An original version of this editorial first appeared on the Journal's website on May 12. In the interest of transparency, we've uploaded PDFs of all our referenced correspondences with the city to accompany the online version of this story. Because, you know, we've got nothing to hide.

Editor:

As a longtime resident of Humboldt County, I would like to express my support for Estelle Fennell's re-election for Second District Supervisor. Estelle has an acute awareness of the challenges confronting our neighbors and institutions throughout the Second District. And for many of these issues she has demonstrated her ability to identify, answer and resolve the problems we face managing and governing our communities.

During the drought and while I was on its board, the Weott Community Services District (WCSD) faced what we declared a disaster because of the catastrophic failure of our water supply infrastructure. Estelle quickly recognized our situation and was instrumental in obtaining the support of the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors, the California State Water Resources and many other state and county agencies to gain the resources needed to repair our water system and strengthen its ability to operate into the future. I cannot thank her enough for her help not only for WCSD but for the long list of support she has delivered throughout the Second District.

Estelle Fennell

Bud Rogers

Stumpin' the 2nd District

By Linda Stansberry

linda@northcoastjournal.com

Like most political races between incumbents and upstarts, the scrimmage for the 2nd District is a tug-of-war between vision and experience. In one corner, there's Bud Rogers, the banjo maker and KMUD DJ whose platform is the hyper-localization of commerce, legislation and food. In the other corner is Estelle Fennell, also a KMUD alum, who often references her three-and-a-half years of experience on the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors as proof positive that broad visions are great, but compromise is where the rubber meets the road.

Consider, for example, the twinned issues of housing and homelessness, which are flashpoints across Humboldt, but in Southern Humboldt especially. Rental units are rare, low-income housing in high demand, and a swelling population of homeless people has inspired citizen patrols of Garberville and a contentious debate over the installation of a public restroom.

During a May 4 debate on KMUD, Rogers had a straightforward solution: "Tiny homes," he exclaimed in his characteristic wheezy shout. "Tiny home villages. How about this: and a sheltered workshop where the people could build ... tiny homes!"

Fennell's answer, delivered in her lilting

Irish accent, was more measured, suffused with the caution of a seasoned politician.

"Every single county in California has some issues," she said. "The county is stepping forward."

She doubled back to her experience on the board's marijuana ad hoc committee, alluding to the large number of private homes that are being used to grow plants and the impact that illegal, large-scale grows and anti-social behavior have on the community.

"Our community has been impacted so badly by people who come in here and just rip the hills apart," she said early in the debate, adding that the garbage left by homeless people paled in comparison to household garbage thrown off the side of the road by "people living in the hills."

"I think better human behavior is the answer," she said.

Politics was not an obvious path for either candidate: Rogers is a Vietnam veteran from the San Joaquin Valley who relocated to Humboldt after a short stint as a firefighter, going on to work as a substitute teacher in the Southern Humboldt and Leggett school systems and ply his trade as a cabinetmaker and musician in the Ettersburg area for several decades. Fennell ricocheted across the map, from Ireland to studying language in Rome, then on to study art in Washington, D.C. and Brooklyn.

Both are around the same age (Rogers is 67, Fennell 66) and have lived the same amount of time in Southern Humboldt. Their concerns have some overlap, with shared views about the importance of community safety, law enforcement and fire protection, but their methodology on how to best accomplish these ends differs.

Fennell cites the success of the county's temporary Measure Z sales tax in funding positions for law enforcement and road repair. Rogers sees the potential of holistic change through the establishment of a charter county and a public bank. A public bank would allow more business development, he argues, and give people access to loans so they can both build and buy more housing. Changing Humboldt's governing structure will allow more autonomy over what Rogers considers key issues, such as chemtrails.

Chemtrails, the alleged control of the weather and populace via distribution of hazardous chemicals (as evidenced by jet contrails), is a major topic of conversation on Rogers' KMUD show. Asked about this topic during the debate, Fennell took a tactful stance, saying she was certainly willing to investigate it, but it seemed like a state rather than a county issue. So, too, is the sticky issue of widening the highway at Richardson Grove, Fennell claims, although she is for it in principle, as a safety issue. Nope, says Rogers, it's a way to allow big box stores more access to our local economy.

"We've got a Walmart in Eureka, kids," retorted Fennell. The tourists we'd all like to see more of often drive big RVs, and could use the extra room on the road, she said.

Rogers ran for supervisor once before, in 2004. Many of his talking points — small business, homelessness and housing affordability — were the same then, although preventing Mad Cow disease was the fringe issue of that time. He lost that election to incumbent Roger Rodoni.

Around that same time, Fennell was quietly preparing for her ascendancy into politics. She left a 17-year career as news director at KMUD for a three-year stint as executive director at the Humboldt Coalition for Property Rights before launching a successful campaign against Clif Clendenen in 2012.

It seems unlikely that Rogers will succeed where he faltered 12 years ago, but Fennell doesn't seem to be taking her eye off the ball. Maybe she's taking her cues from the national stage — a blazer-clad, seasoned politician versus a passionate outsider with some unconventional ideas? Seems like we've heard this one before. ●

The Thrilling 3rd

Without an incumbent in the race, two vie for board seat

By Grant Scott-Goforth

grant@northcoastjournal.com

Humboldt County's 3rd District covers a portion of the county north and east of Humboldt Bay and includes the cities of Arcata and Blue Lake, as well as the unincorporated communities of Freshwater, Kneeland and Manila. With sitting 3rd District Supervisor Mark Lovelace's decision not to seek re-election, two contenders have thrown their hats in the ring.

Mike Wilson, 47, has lived in Humboldt County nearly all of his life, save for a few years spent attending college and working in the Bay Area.

Wilson, who lives in Arcata, has been elected to the Humboldt Bay Harbor, Recreation and Conservation District commission three times and has co-owned an engineering consulting firm since 1995.

He said he's running for supervisor because he loves Humboldt County. "This is where I grew up, graduated from HSU, and where my wife and I have decided we want to make our lives and raise our kids," he said. "We have a very special place here and I care about our future."

Working on the Harbor District has taught him he's motivated by public service and "bringing my problem-solving skills to work for solutions," he said.

Wilson said planning an economic and environmental future is one of the greatest issues facing the county. "After the Board of Supervisors finishes the county

Mike Wilson

Uri Driscoll

General Plan we will need to implement policies for jobs creation, housing, transportation, the environment, our quality of life and response to climate change.

The "rapidly changing" cannabis industry is another issue the county needs to address, Wilson said. "We must reduce the environmental and community impacts and encourage transitioning into a regulated and taxed framework that creates a positive outcome for all of us."

He said supervisors need to manage "tight budgets while maintaining essential infrastructure, public safety and human health needs."

Finally, he said homelessness needs to be addressed. "I'm a 'Housing First' advocate. Ultimately, safe housing is needed to stabilize people's situations so that other issues can be addressed."

When it comes to issues specific to the 3rd District, Wilson said economic diversity is key. "Arcata is a leader and we can do more across the 3rd District for pre-permitting and infrastructure to promote new and existing businesses."

Roads and public safety need to be addressed in the less urban parts of the district, including Blue Lake, Bayside, Indianola, Manila, Freshwater and Kneeland, he said.

"Being available and responsive to these residents' needs is a big part of the job."

Another issue he hears constituents bring up is a regional trail system. "We need to catch up to other places in the nation that already provide this important infrastructure," he said.

Uri Driscoll has been a professional farrier for 29 of the 33 years he's lived in Humboldt County.

The 55-year old Arcatan has also raised and trained horses and used them in therapy sessions, in addition to having planted a vineyard, worked on ranches and in restaurants, among other things.

He said he chose to run for 3rd District supervisor because "it is important to have good choices when choosing our leaders. It is also vital that we have healthy discussion as to the direction of our community. Instilling those choices and discussion into election cycles allows us, as a community, to refocus our intentions."

Driscoll said economic development is the most important issue facing Humboldt County. "Without a strong, sound economy we become weak politically and vulnerable to the whims of outside forces," he said.

Homelessness, affordable housing and drug use are also costing "obscene amounts of money and the lives of our children and fellow citizens," he said.

Additionally, he said, the county needs to "address how to retain law enforcement personnel and reduce excessive overtime costs. Enabling officers down time with their families is a must."

Finally, he said, communication has been an issue with county government. "When communication breaks down between agencies and the public we, at times, create massive problems that can be very expensive to fix."

Specific to the 3rd District, Driscoll said the Arcata waste water treatment facility "may end up being very problematic and expensive to bring into compliance."

He'd also like to see industrial and commercial zones filled with businesses that will provide "much-needed jobs" and revenue to maintain infrastructure and build amenities.

And maintaining productive agricultural lands in the 3rd District is crucial, he said: "We need to support ranchers and farmers as they work hard to provide healthy food and open space for us and vital habitat for wildlife." ●

Third District

Mike Wilson

What is your favorite movie?

I'm not really a "favorites" person. I do love a good post-apocalyptic sci-fi flick, but not the popular teenage combat ones. I also really like a good soundtrack; Harold and Maude, Repo Man and a few Tarantino movies come to mind.

What is your favorite book?

Trout Fishing in America by Richard Brautigan. It's a great book. More recently,

How Music Works, by David Byrne was cool. I'm still a Tom Robbins fan.

What magazine do you read most regularly?

Probably National Geographic. I love political and science magazines in general, when I have time. Is North Coast Journal a "magazine"? I read that every week.

If your campaign had a theme song, what would it be?

"Waiting for the Great Leap Forward"

by Billy Bragg. Like my taste in music, its content is dated, sarcastic and self-deprecating.

Who is your role model?

My 96-year-old grandmother. Her stories about family, education and work are special to me. But it's the experiences she shares about her work with her husband as a union organizer in the Midwest and Detroit from the 1930s through the 1980s that I really love to hear about. She not only organized for better conditions of workers, but also did the hard work within the unions to democratize, desegregate and provide equal pay for women.

Who is your favorite fictional politician?

Amy Poehler on Parks and Recreation — Leslie Knope's short time on the city council says it all.

Who is your favorite real-life politician?

Elizabeth Warren, an amazing communicator with great values.

Dogs or cats?

That really depends on the particular animal. Two cats are a part of our family right now. Sometimes I believe one of them, Oliver, thinks he's a dog.

What political party do you think Bigfoot belongs to and why?

I asked my long time friend Bobo. I believe he is Humboldt County's most famous Bigfoot expert. He says if Bigfoot could register he would be a Green Party member, but with a Libertarian bent.

What is your favorite swimming hole in Humboldt County?

My favorite swimming holes are in Southern Humboldt. One of the reasons they are great is because no one is there. If I told you where they are, my friends would kill me. I can tell you that Horse Linto Falls on the Trinity (aka Devil's Elbow) on a weekday is a go-to spot for our family.

What is your favorite hobby?

I have two: playing guitar and fishing. Playing in a band again is something I would love to have more time to do.

What would your superpower be, and how would you use it?

I wish I had the ability to remember the lyrics and chords to all the songs I've ever heard. This would be really useful at campfires.

Uri Driscoll

What is your favorite movie?

UnBranded, a documentary about four young men taking a herd of mustang horses through the wilderness from Mexico to Canada.

What is your favorite book?

Anam Cara, a Book of Celtic Wisdom by John O'Donahue. Followed closely by A Sand County Almanac.

What magazine do you read most regularly?

If you don't tell anyone I'll admit it is the North Coast Journal.

If your campaign had a theme song, what would it be?

"Born to Run" by Bruce Springsteen.

Who is your role model?

Tom Dorrance the master horseman.

Who is your favorite fictional politician?

Dr. Elizabeth McCord played by Tea Leoni in Madam Secretary. I love how she brings some horse sense to the White House.

Who is your favorite real-life politician?

Historical: Winston Churchill. Past: Jimmy Carter. Current: Elizabeth Warren.

Dogs or cats?

Dogs, cats, horses, chickens, deer, ravens, tree and barn swallows; all are on the Driscoll dole. Of course, my wife and I are getting a heck of a deal from the entertainment perspective.

What is your favorite swimming hole in Humboldt County?

I don't swim much, mainly because I sink so easily.

What is your favorite hobby?

Mounted archery. I like it most because I need to improve so much.

What political party do you think Big-foot belongs to and why?

They have their own party and only invite Libertarians.

What would your superpower be, and how would you use it?

To be invisible. I would use it to party with the Sasquatches again. Since I registered as a Democrat in 1984 they don't invite me anymore. ●

Dude, Where's My Impairment Test?

By Linda Stansberry

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

The American Automobile Association's name cropped up in several articles this month on the topic of driving while under the influence of marijuana. On the basis of headlines alone, the organization, which often weighs in on issues effecting motorists, appears to have added its influence to a conflicting array of opinions.

Tests that examine marijuana impairment are flawed, the AAA declared on May 10. However, on the same day, the organization announced that cannabis-involved traffic fatalities in Washington have almost doubled since the state legalized the drug. So, what's the takeaway for reductionist fear-mongers and/or bong-clutching commuters?

Well, science is hard, and creating sexy news from science is even harder. In fact, these two newsbytes came from the same series of studies (hence why they were reported on the same day). And the findings are not mutually exclusive. First, the Washington fatality rates: Between 2012 and 2014, the number of drivers killed with marijuana in their systems jumped from 8 to 17 percent. Colorado saw a similar rise, according to some statistics, from 10 to 19 percent. However, correlation is not always causation. The Washington study has a couple of big caveats: It doesn't say whether the drivers involved in the crashes were at fault, or whether those drivers, who had THC in their systems, were actually impaired by the THC at the time of the crashes. And, concludes the study, it's hard to measure what impairment really means when it comes to pot.

The current limit in most states with marijuana DUI laws on the books is 5 nanograms of active THC per milliliter of blood, as measured by a post-traffic stop blood test. But what that looks like on the road can vary from person to person; a dedicated stoner with a high tolerance may not be fazed by this amount, while a wobbly-kneed newbie might be lost behind the wheel. Also, the amount of THC in the blood can drop quite a bit between being pulled over and getting tested. Testing for alcohol in the blood is generally a more straightforward process, but AAA calls current tests for marijuana impairment "unscientific."

And unfair, alleges Manny Daskal, a local attorney specializing in defending DUI cases. Daskal says he's left messages with Assemblyman Jim Wood several times to register his disdain for Assembly Bill 2740, which would institute a 5-nanogram limit for California drivers. The bill — which recently went before the Assembly Committee on Public Safety — is rather wacky, as it was drafted as a human trafficking bill and has undergone significant revisions. It includes a clause stating, "It is unlawful for a person who is addicted to the use of any drug to drive a vehicle." Daskal sees some sinister mechanisms.

"My take on it politically is that the government's going to be losing a lot of money [after legalization] because they'll no longer charge people with cultivation or possession," he said, adding that people who are stoned actually drive better than people who aren't, because they're more careful. Sounds scientific.

"Marijuana/cannabis makes people driving with alcohol in their systems actually better drivers than if they had only alcohol in their systems," he doubled down in a follow-up email. Daskal could not immediately give us numbers on how many DUI cases he had successfully defended.

AAA is calling for better roadside tests to prove impairment, tests that rely on behavioral and physiological evidence. The old chestnut "recite the alphabet backwards" might work for some, but Journal staffers have some additional suggestions on how to judge if you're too high to drive.

1. Did you hit a pothole on Port Kenyon Road, freak out, get out to see if you'd accidentally hit a dog, then lock your keys in the car?
2. Sublime: Just bitchin', or really bitchin'?
3. They got to the four-way stop first, didn't they? Didn't they?
4. Look at your hand. No, really look at it.
5. Are you on your way to White Castle after watching Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle only to remember that Humboldt County doesn't have a White Castle and get lost and end up in that part of McKinleyville where there are those houses that look like castles, which is really fucking trippy?
5. Finish this sentence: Did you ever think about how ...

Conservationists Ask FLOTUS to Dance

Hey, Michelle Obama, have any plans for May 20 and 21? That's when three members of the Fortuna California Conservation Corps will be in Washington, D.C. to help celebrate the National Parks Service centennial with a nature-inspired dance. And, yeah, they want you to join in.

The BioBlitz Dance came about as part of a collaboration between National Geographic and the National Parks Service. Every year for the last decade, the agencies have encouraged people to get out to their national parks for a BioBlitz event, in which people have a short amount of time to find, count and record as many different species as possible. The purpose is to bring awareness to the importance of biodiversity.

Redwood National Park's BioBlitz will be on May 26, and the park will also host a centennial celebration on June 26.

So, why a BioBlitz Dance? And why is this a big deal? Well, John Griffith, a conservationist with the California Conservation Corps, is kind of a dance sensation. Some of you may remember his video gone viral from a few years ago, occasionally mistitled "Park Ranger Dancing," in which he busts some serious moves to the delight of the young people he supervises.

The video garnered more than 6 million views on YouTube, and Griffith channeled his newfound Internet fame into doing what he loves most: educating the next generation about the environment.

"I'm a conservationist and I've always tried to get people interested in wildlife conservation," Griffith said. "I want to get people outdoors. A lot of the talk about biodiversity is depressing, like animals going extinct and stuff. The BioBlitz Dance is a celebration of nature. People have been dancing to celebrate the outdoors for centuries."

In 2014, Griffith and his corps members (the CCC offers job training to young people ages 18 to 25, many of whom go on to work in conservation and firefighting) created a dance to celebrate the 2014 BioBlitz and Biodiversity Festival at Golden Gate National Recreation Area. They uploaded the dance, which features a variety of moves both hip-hop and nature-inspired ("turkey vulture" arm flap, anyone?), onto YouTube. Many people watched it and joined the corpsmembers onstage and then, later, online. You can find BioBlitz dance videos performed by young conservationists from Yosemite to the Everglades. (Griffith's 86-year old grandmother also uploaded a video, which you can find at www.northcoastjournal.com. You're welcome.)

Griffith and two corpsmembers, Sierra Preston and Karlee Jewell, will fly to Washington, D.C. later this week to help kick off the National Park Service BioBlitz opening ceremony. They will perform along with several top officials including (they hope) Michelle Obama. (Hit her up on Twitter using @MichelleObama or @FLOTUS.)

The Defender

Public defender Heidi Holmquist manages several hundred criminal cases at a time ranging from misdemeanors to violent felonies. Photo by León Villagómez

If you cannot afford an attorney,
Heidi Holmquist may be provided for you

By Grant Scott-Goforth

grant@northcoastjournal.com

Inside the drab, weather-beaten shingled public defender's office — which could be described as the architecture of obscurity — is a windowless office that public defender Heidi Holmquist has turned into a little beacon of buoyancy.

In her pink-striped office, she sits at a desk piled with stacks of criminal case files, the records of people caught in the worst moments of their lives — often desperate, addicted or mentally ill, sometimes all three. From here, Holmquist helps to manage 2,800 cases at a time at a salary lower than similar positions in other counties.

In six years as a Humboldt County public defender, Holmquist has won two murder acquittals at trial, and overseen the dismissal of another murder charge, on top of her ongoing management of hundreds of cases ranging from misdemeanors to felonies.

She is, of course, not alone. There are three county offices of public defenders dedicated to helping the indigent who run afoul of the law — 15 attorneys in all who each manage a similar caseload.

But at 31 years of age, in a county far from home, in an underfunded department, Holmquist's successes in the courtroom are noteworthy, her energy and commitment to the often misunderstood and maligned duties of the public defender unflagged.

Jason Arreaga gripped Holmquist's hand as hard as he could as a clerk read his verdict on Feb. 23. Arreaga had been accused of a 2014 double murder in Fieldbrook, and had spent almost a year and a half in the Humboldt County jail. A trial in September 2015 had ended in a hung jury, and the 30-year-old was facing life in prison without the possibility of parole.

As the verdicts were read, "Not guilty of second degree murder, not guilty of voluntary manslaughter," Arreaga became emotional, Holmquist said. She did, too. He would end up staying in jail several more weeks on an unrelated charge, but Arreaga had been acquitted.

Holmquist said the jury's finding speaks for itself. During the trial, she focused on the Sheriff's Office investigation, saying deputies had quickly identified Arreaga as the suspect and "never looked seriously at anyone else." Holmquist convinced the jury there wasn't enough evidence to convict Arreaga, who's now back in his Lake County home.

Holmquist said Arreaga wasn't your typical client accused of double murder. He was polite and patient, she said, despite the mistrial and being far from his family.

"I remember being upfront with him from the beginning," she said, telling him that going to trial in a year would be fast. "Because as much as a person wants their trial as soon as possible — because they want to get out — we can't do that. We can't just go to trial immediately. We have to do what we need to do."

Holmquist said Arreaga was always patient with her, but it didn't mean she could drag her feet. "Sometimes you have to think, 'OK this person is locked in a cell 23 hours a day,' and you have to put that in perspective when you're working on it. It's hard, when someone is in that mindset of, 'I didn't do it so I shouldn't be here,' to explain to them that 'the police think that you did it. And the district attorney thinks that you did it. And now we have to overcome that and it takes some time.'"

Public defenders play against a stacked deck. When it comes to trials, Holmquist said, "theoretically the defense should always lose because ... [prosecutors] get to choose their cases. They choose the ones they believe have enough evidence to show beyond a reasonable doubt that it happened."

At any point, a district attorney's office can choose to dismiss charges. "I don't get to do the same thing," Holmquist said. "I take the case no matter what the circumstances are."

And Holmquist's success is remarkable. In six years she's successfully defended two homicide cases and seen another dismissed. State statistics on murder convictions were unavailable, but data show that out of 300,000 felony arrests in 2014, 80 percent were resolved in court. Only 0.1 percent of the total resulted in acquittal.

In the end Arreaga's patience paid off. Holmquist said he was "extremely grateful of the process and the jurors who were able to listen to the case and take that responsibility."

And for her part? "It gives me faith the system is working," she said.

Holmquist looks young but polished. She has decorated her office with thank-you cards from former clients, photographs and several shelves stacked with dozens of high heels she wears exclusively for court appearances. She didn't always picture herself as part of the criminal justice system that sees hundreds of thousands of people accused of crimes in California every year.

When Holmquist was 10, her family moved to a small town in the outskirts of San Diego, where she attended high school. She was the 2002 Ramona Rodeo Queen, a detail, she said with a laugh, that she debated sharing.

She attended college at the University of California Davis, opting to attend McGeorge School of Law in Sacramento afterward. "I think I always knew I would do something like be a lawyer, but I never imagined I would do something like [public defense]," she said. "When I started law school I was terrified of public speaking. I was horrible."

But she got to know public defenders and went through the university's trial preparedness program, which has students carry out mock trials. In her last year of school, she got an internship at the Yolo County Public Defender's Office, which she called a "great experience." There, under supervision, she carried out trials in a real court system — and that experience made her hungry to pursue public defense.

Humboldt County's public defender's office was one of the first where she applied after school. "I had no idea where Humboldt County was or what I was doing, but I just wanted to do this work so badly I didn't care where it took me," she said.

Despite the less-than-sterling image public defenders are saddled with, Holmquist said she found a calling in the practice.

"You have a certain level of freedom, you get to experience a lot, you get to represent all sorts of people and you get to do it in a way that you're not influenced how much money the person can pay," she said. "And you have a wealth of knowledge around you."

She loves the community and natural beauty of the area and, despite her family being far away in Southern California, she's found a second family of sorts in the attorneys and staff members of the public defender's office.

Holmquist at her high school graduation with her mom Marlene Holmquist and grandmother Anna Marie Friel. Submitted Holmquist's first big case was already a decade old when she came on board in 2011. Joey Miller, then 43 years old, was accused of the 2002 stabbing murder of Eureka resident Beverly Jean Jacob, and had sat in jail for months since his arrest by Eureka Police.

Miller had been in and out of prison for most of his life, developing drug addictions along the way. Years after Jacob's killing, police had found traces of Miller's DNA — along with that of three to four other people — on her clothing.

The county, spread thin with a large number of murder cases, contracted with a private firm to hire Greg Elvine-Kreis to defend Miller. Elvine-Kreis, now the head of Humboldt County's Conflict Counsel, an arm of the Public Defender's office, was six months into Miller's case when Holmquist started expressing an interest.

She'd been doing misdemeanors, Elvine-Kreis said, and with her boss' approval she was soon an eager second chair on the Miller defense.

"She jumped in with both feet and assisted on every level of research," Elvine-Kreis said. "She was an integral part of that defense team."

It was the first murder case that had gone to trial for either attorney, and Elvine-Kreis said there was a great deal of pressure because both thought Miller was innocent.

When Miller's jury went into deliberations, Elvine-Kreis said he and Holmquist went back to the public defender's office to wait on a verdict. "It's a hard time as you're waiting, wondering what's going to happen, how long it's going to take."

Holmquist as the 2002 Ramona Rodeo Queen. Submitted

While they fidgeted, Holmquist occupied herself by finding a civil case out of Florida that applied to Miller's situation. When someone who has been jailed throughout his or her trial is acquitted, it's standard practice for them to be taken back to the jail after the acquittal for processing and to gather belongings. This can take four, five, maybe six hours, Elvine-Kreis said. But Holmquist found a case that allowed for acquitted defendants to walk out of the courtroom. She and Elvine-Kreis rushed to the judge with this information.

And when Miller's verdict came back not guilty, rather than being handcuffed and returned to his jail cell one last time, Miller walked out the front doors of the courthouse with his mom. "Needless to say, it caused quite a stir up at the courthouse," Elvine-Kreis said.

That story, he said, is an example of Holmquist's character: She's not content to sit and wait for an answer when there's more that can be done for her clients. And, he said, that enthusiasm hasn't waned in her six years on the job.

But Holmquist's character — indeed, the reputation of a public defender — is not immediately apparent to many people, clients or otherwise.

"My style, when I talk to people, I'm not a person who's going to sugarcoat things. I tell [clients] up front, 'This is a very serious case, and this is what you're looking at, and I know you don't want that so this is what we're gonna do so that doesn't happen.' That's a hard pill to swallow."

And public defenders are constantly fighting stereotypes. "Dump truck" and "public pretender" are common nicknames that she addresses earnestly with clients. "That's absolutely not something I'm going to let you think or say," she said she tells them. "I'm going to work hard and you're going to see and I'm going to change your mind."

Arreaga said it took Holmquist most of a year to gain his trust. "It was really hard for me to trust my life in her hands," he told the Journal on the telephone recently.

"It took a long time. The case went so slow, I barely got to see her in court and see what was going on," he said. The prevailing attitude among his fellow inmates, he said, was that if you got a public defender you were screwed.

"There were a lot of people who didn't have good impressions of her either," he said. But as the case went on, his faith in Holmquist grew. "From the gate she did not take it lightly. She acted like it was a big responsibility — which it was."

He said Holmquist "blew him away" during his first trial, which ended in a hung jury. By the second go-around, he trusted her completely. "I don't think I could've done better with any amount of money," he said. "I can't say enough how great she was. I owe her my life."

For her part, Holmquist said Arreaga was a model client — helpful, engaged, understanding and patient. And that helps, she said, because representing someone facing life in prison is hugely stressful. "You dream about it. You wake up at 2 in the morning, [when] everything is an impossible crisis that you're never going to be able to solve. During a trial, your life changes ... even in small ones. You're protecting a person."

Holmquist believes strongly a public defender's role is to provide constitutional protections to the indigent, but she also said landing a public defender shouldn't be seen as a bad break.

largely because of the legal experience they offer, especially to fresh-out-of-law-school attorneys. While caseloads are typically high for public defenders (and pay relatively low — Holmquist earned about $70,000 in 2014 according to Transparent California, while public defenders in other counties and private attorneys easily earn six figures), Holmquist said that real, in-the-courtroom practice on a variety of cases is invaluable experience for an attorney.

On top of that, public defenders have a whole office to turn to for advice — fellow defenders, investigators and support staff who often have years of experience.

“Having a public defender — and a public defender’s office — behind you is a pretty powerful thing to have,” Holmquist said. “It is true that we have a lot of clients and a lot of cases and a lot to do. But — I can speak for all of Humboldt County’s public defenders — our heart is in it. We’re trying to do our best all the time.”

That position may be lost on the community at large, where public defenders are met with a different type of mistrust or disdain.

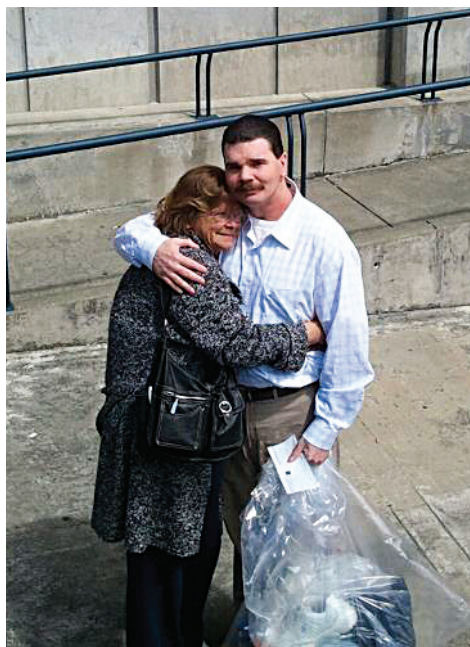

“Why do you represent guilty people?” is a common refrain, Holmquist said, one she’s even heard from her family.

“It’s not about being on the good side or bad side,” she tells people. “It’s just about making sure it’s fair, making sure that the clients’ needs are protected and that their point of view is seen.

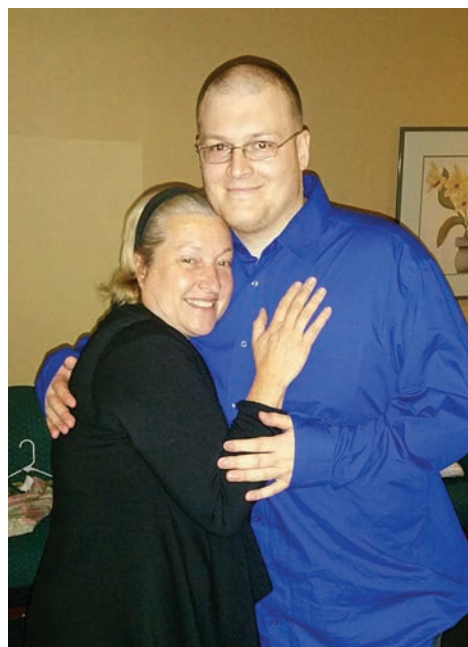

“Some of the people that you represent are not good people, that’s definitely true. But ... there’s so much more to the story; about how a person got there, and why a person did something, and what the punishment should be, and is the punishment fair? Does it help protect society? Does it make it so this won’t happen again?”

And the role of a public defender ends up being much more than defending a person accused of a crime. Holmquist finds herself being an educator: helping people who often haven’t finished high school to figure out complicated legal procedures. She’s a translator, expressing the desires of her clients — unversed in legalese — to judges and relaying orders back to them. Public defenders find themselves being social workers, pointing clients toward services they can seek when their cases are resolved that will help keep them from reoffending.

Finally, representing some clients can lead to a sort of attachment, although

Jason Arreaga, whom Holmquist also successfully defended against murder charges, poses with his mother. Submitted

Holmquist jokes that she tells clients after their cases, “I never want to see you again.” Holmquist was a surrogate family member of sorts to Arreaga, whose parents lived too far out of the area to visit him while he was in jail awaiting trial, and she still checks in on him occasionally. She and Joey Miller’s mom are friends on Facebook.

“I’ve never thought of it as ‘you’re representing the bad guys,’” Holmquist said.

Murder trials are relatively rare, but Holmquist said because of the high stakes, they don’t often get pleaded out. Assistant District Attorney Zachary Curtis, who prosecuted Arreaga’s murder trial, said he’s had nothing but good experiences working with Holmquist.

“I’ve found her to be aggressive, very, very clever, very well prepared,” he said, as well as “highly ethical. ... I have a great deal of confidence she does everything in her power to represent her clients.”

In addition to her successful acquittals, Holmquist had another murder case dismissed. On Sept. 15, 2013, 33-year-old Joshua Burrell was released from the Humboldt County jail about half past midnight. He made his way two blocks up the street to the Royal Inn where, during an apparent fight, he was stabbed once in the chest. He died at St. Joseph Hospital. Several days later, Eureka police arrested William Flores, and then-Deputy District Attorney Elan Firpo announced Flores would be charged with Burrell’s murder, as well as gang-related allegations.

A couple weeks later, the case against Flores was dismissed and he was released from jail, his $1.5 million bail lifted. At the time, Firpo did not rule out Flores as a suspect, and hinted in a statement to the Times-Standard that her office might refile charges. It never did.

And while the dismissal of charges may seem like a victory for Flores and his attorney in the matter — Holmquist — it didn’t end there. She chalked the dismissal up to the unique circumstances of the case — “It was one of those anomalies; that is not something that should happen or normally would happen,” she said — but she kept working on Flores’ behalf. And Flores was recently granted a finding of factual innocence, a court-approved expungement, of sorts, based on a motion Holmquist made showing the court there was no evidence upon which a reasonable person would find Flores guilty.

Not all cases go that way, of course.

In 2013, Holmquist represented Anthony Lane, an Alderpoint man who’d been charged with the murder of Walter Herold Craig Jr. Within six weeks of his arrest, Lane had seen the evidence against him and pleaded guilty. “The police did their investigation, the client saw the investigation, we went forward with his wishes to just be guilty as soon as possible and it was done very quickly,” Holmquist said.

While it’s a stark juxtaposition with her other murder cases, the Lane case doesn’t necessarily represent a loss. Most criminal cases are pleaded out — it’s what holds the American criminal justice system together, what allows small courts, prosecutors’ and defenders’ offices to handle the thousands of ongoing cases.

The Humboldt County public defender’s office handles an ongoing caseload of about 2,800. According to approximate 2014 numbers, public defenders handled an average of more than 200 felony cases a year, well above American Bar Association standards of 150.

Legal counsel for every American is a core tenet of the Constitution’s 6th Amendment, and the responsibility of offering that representation falls to counties.

Large caseloads are not unique to Humboldt County — the Bar Association’s Criminal Justice Section Chair in 2011 addressed a “perennial financial crisis in indigent defense services.” That is, public defender’s offices are almost universally underfunded.

That problem has become more acute locally, Holmquist said. More cases are going to trial — whether as a result of changes in the prosecutor’s office, the impacts of Proposition 47, or other unseen forces — without additional help for public defenders.

In addition, Humboldt County has been delivering Measure Z tax revenue to the sheriff’s and DA’s offices — increasing the number of arrests and criminal cases. “We have more law enforcement and we have more attorneys on the other side and we haven't seen any increase on our side," Holmquist said. "Keeping up with that on our end has been a challenge."

She and others in public defense refer to the criminal justice system as a "three-legged stool" consisting of law enforcement, prosecutors and defenders. Without enough defenders, case backlogs grow, charges are dropped for lack of representation and public safety is threatened — the dreaded revolving door. Funding the other legs of the stool is politically popular, but is the public defender's office a low priority for budget decision makers, the Humboldt County Board of Supervisors?

"I think it's pretty obvious that that is the case," Holmquist said. "You can put all the boots on the ground that you want ... but those boots don't mean anything if the attorneys aren't there to handle the case once it gets filed. That not only keeps the wheels of justice from being gummed up, it protects vulnerable citizens. "Without an attorney, the power of the government is so great. You only get one person to help you but we're that one person. ... We get to help them and ensure that their rights are protected, that their interests are protected: Are you going to be able to get student loans in the future? Are you going to get deported? Are you going to be able to get a job? Are you going to get kicked out of your housing with your family?"

Holmquist's office, under the leadership of Public Defender Kevin Robinson, fights for funding, but it's also looking at a novel approach to defending. Robinson, with the support of Holmquist and other attorneys, hopes to turn the public defender's office into a sort of outpost of social services; to have Social Security, immigration attorneys, mental health counselors and other safety net representatives available to immediately assist the people who end up as defense clients.

Holmquist said she's not planning to go anywhere anytime soon. She has nothing but positive things to say about the local defense bar — public and private — and the Humboldt County judges she works with regularly. And she would like to help the public defender's office grow into a social service-oriented program.

Holmquist is hopeful funding that kind of project will become more politically viable, that people will start looking at rehabilitation as the most viable answer for the vast majority of repeat offenders with mental health and addiction issues.

"We can fund the criminal justice system all we want but how do we get people out of it?" Holmquist asked. That kind of philosophical musing might be above the pay grade of a young public defender in a remote corner of California. But so might be working for years to clear a client's name, or finding a rare loophole so an innocent man can walk out of court — instead of back to his jail cell. To Holmquist, it's part of the job. ●

LET'S GROW GREENER PLANTING TIPS:

1. Temperatures are warm enough to plant most flowers and vegetables without protection. It's still a little chilly early in the month for cucumbers, tomatoes, peppers and squash. Keep some 'Seed Guard' cloth on hand to protect the tender plants.

2. Prune your spring blooming shrubs now. You can dead head the spent flowers. You can also feed your plantings now. Organic, acidic fertilizers for rhododendrons, azaleas and camellias and all purpose fertilizers for the rest of the plants.

3. Drip irrigation systems put water where you need it and will save you money. Mulches of fine fir bark, shredded bark, compost or wood chips will also cut back on soil water loss. A 3-4" layer will hold the moisture for a couple of months in some soils. Most established trees and shrubs can get by with no summer watering.

4. Feed any citrus trees that are in the ground or pots. They need regular applications of fertilizer and iron to keep healthy and productive. We recommend G&B Fruit and Citrus Fertilizer with an additional application of iron. Container grown plants need to be fed more often than those in the ground.

5. Start thinning developing fruit on your fruit trees. Thin small stone fruits (apricots and plums) to one fruit every 2-4 inches. Larger stone fruits (peaches and nectarines) should be thinned to one every 4-5 inches. Apples and pears should be thinned to one per cluster and then then 6-8 inches apart. Leave the largest fruit out each cluster.

Mmm, Melons!

How to get a good harvest
in a marginal climate

By Heather Jo Flores

downanddirty@northcoastjournal.com

If you're a North Coast gardener and you feel like melons are easy to grow, please, message me! I want to learn your methods. I have found this crop to be one of the most challenging of annual vegetables. If it were anything else, I'd probably have given up by now. But nothing can replace the sweet sticky pleasure of a summer afternoon spent eating a perfectly ripe garden-fresh melon. I tried a dozen different varieties of melons, and grew them in twice as many ways, and sometimes all I got was a single melon, small and underripe, barely edible after four months of work. Finally, I found a few great varieties and developed a system for getting the best melon harvest possible.

If you're anything like me, you enjoy coming up with systems and structures to increase the yield and functionality of your garden. Anyone who has spent time and resources building trellises, cold frames or cloches will find it easy to agree that it was worth the effort, and this could not be more true when it comes to growing melons in a climate that is prone to late frosts (however brief) and early rains. Use the advice and devices below and you'll be serving up a honeydew salsa by Labor Day! (Check the Journal this summer for my favorite salsa recipes.)

Choose locally bred, short-season, small-fruit varieties.

When it comes to temperate gardens, the best and most reliable melon variety, a million times over, is the Ha'ogen, a small, tangy-sweet, green-flesh fruit that ripens in about 75 days and falls into the honeydew category in terms of looks and flavor. I have also had good success with Hoodoo melons, a.k.a. "Hearts of Gold," which are more like a cantaloupe. They are both available from our local Baker Creek Seeds, which has been breeding melons for this region for almost two decades. I encourage you to visit www.rareseeds.com and take a chance on whatever appeals to you.

What about watermelons, you ask? I don't recommend them. It's just not hot enough here. But don't let that dissuade you from trying! Just be sure to choose varieties that fruit in 90 days or less.

Do the math.

Read the seed packet and count backwards from when you want to be eating melons. Consider that one quick frost is enough to kill melons, so make sure your harvest will come in well before that. Also consider that melons need as many hot sunny days as possible to grow big and ripen, so if you plant them too early, they will languish in the early summer rains. All of that being known, I think the second half of August is a realistic time to expect your crop. So, if you want to start harvesting August 15, and your seed packet says 90 days, you will need to get your seeds planted around May 15. But don't plant them before Cinco de Mayo. Remember what I said about melons needing those hot summer days to boost the yield!

Set them up to succeed.

Amend with fertile garden compost and thoroughly work up a garden bed 36 inches wide. Melons like sandy loam, and they must be spaced at least 30 inches apart, so decide how many plants you want and plan accordingly. Twenty plants should give an average family a decent harvest, with some to share with the neighbors, so you will need a bed about 25 feet long. You can plant lettuce, spinach or cilantro between the melons, but avoid other cucurbits or heavy feeders like tomatoes or brassicas. Let the melons have the space and resources they need and they will reward you for it.

Don't skimp on water.

Melons love water. Don't go to extremes, but do establish a frequent, consistent routine. Erratic watering can cause fruit deformation, so set up a schedule and stick to it. But don't water overhead when the sun is shining! The leaves will blister and, while it probably won't kill the plants, they will spend energy healing instead of making your fruits. Hand water deeply into the base of the plant with a hose at least four times a week just before dusk. I don't trust drip or automatic watering with my melons, and neither should you.

Keep the melon zone clean.

Throughout the season, keep the entire area meticulously weeded. I don't mulch Row covers are important to protect melons in a temperate climate.

melons because they rot so easily. Keep the beds clean and free of debris so that slugs, grubs and mold spores don't have anywhere to hide.

Direct sow and use a cloche system.

Most plants in the cucumber family do not enjoy being transplanted. They tend to spend several days in shock before they begin to grow again. When we're talking about melons, this 6-12 day period could make the difference between getting a harvest or losing semi-ripe melons to the first frost, which can come as early as mid-September in some North Coast microclimates. So, to avoid having to worry about frost either at the beginning or at the end of your melon adventure, build a series of cloches and row-covers for your melon patch. That way you can sow the seeds directly into the ground (avoiding transplant shock and growth-delay) and, if you design creatively, your cloches can double as trellises, to keep the ripening fruits off the ground where they easily rot and get munchd by a wide array of garden marauders. (Everybody loves melons.)

Here's my cloche system for a 90-day melon:

Days 1-15: Sow seeds in small hills under individual cloches made from gallon-sized milk jugs. Cut off the bottom, remove the cap and punch several holes in the plastic. Sow three seeds in each hill and fit the jug over the top to create a tiny greenhouse. Keep evenly moist until seeds sprout, and when seedlings are five days old, remove the two smaller seedlings and leave only one plant on each hill. This is essential. You must thin your seedlings. Water often, removing the milk jugs during hottest part of the day, as needed.

Days 16-44: Remove the milk jugs, wash them, and stash for next year. Use handi-mesh half-circles to make row covers (see photo). Cut the mesh wide enough to form a low dome over the young plants. Position the covers so that all of the plants are on the inside, about 3 inches from the wire. Now cover the mesh covers with greenhouse plastic and clamp it the plastic to the wire with small spring-clamps. Don't worry about closing up the ends, it's better to have the extra ventilation. If it gets extra hot in June, you might need to remove the plastic or punch holes in it. Keep an eye on the little plants; if they wilt or turn yellow, it's too hot. Pull off the plastic but leave the handi-mesh in place.

Days 45-90: Remove the plastic and convert the row covers into horizontal trellises by gently pulling the tendrils of the melon plants from the inside to the outside, letting them grow a bit more, and then poking them back through. As fruits start to form, make sure they aren't getting too heavy for the trellis. You might need to tie a few branches. If fruits are laying on the ground or on top of the mesh, turn them over periodically so that they ripen on all sides.

Humboldt on Tap

Beer Gone Sour

By Carrie Peyton Dahlberg
tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

It's quiet inside The Local Beer Bar in Eureka, where co-owner Darren Cartledge is getting ready for Sour Beer Night. The crowd will come later. Right now it's a couple of hours before opening, and Cartledge has been readying the taps and putting up colorful chalked skateboard signs describing sour after sour.

Sour beers, he tells me, are like sushi. Think about sushi, and wham. The craving doesn't stop until raw fish slips onto your tongue.

Think about sour beers, if you're hooked on them, and nothing else will do. The tartness and complexity start swirling in the imagination. They don't stop until it seems normal to pay $10 and up — way up — for one bottle of beer.

If you haven't fallen prey to sour beer's seduction, Cartledge makes a great tutor. He'll tell you to let your sour warm up before you drink because its flavors come through better at around 55 degrees Fahrenheit. He can introduce you to a wider range of sours than just about anywhere else in Humboldt — sour stouts, sour IPAs, dry-hopped sours, fruit sours and wheat sours.

Like so many beer styles in the United States, sour beers have soaked through category walls and dripped down onto just about anything at least faintly acidic or oddly funky. Some brewers use wild yeasts, welcoming them to invade open vessels. Some add cultivated strains of yeasts or bacteria that increase the acidity. Some age sours for years, some barely at all. And while Belgium was long known as sour central, not all traditional Belgian beers are sours.

The most expensive sours are often those aged the longest, allowing time for a range of flavors to meld and evolve.

"If you want a good sour, you're looking at six months to two years of aging," Cartledge says. "In a really good sour, you want to find a lot of complexity. With the ones that are rushed, you get a beer that is sour for the sake of being sour."

On this April night, The Local will be featuring 11 different sours, beers as varied and colorful as the bar's chalked signs. It seems like the perfect time to steel my nerves and try to appreciate a beer style I've never warmed to. Cartledge is reassuring. "The first time I had a sour, I thought it was disgusting," he says. "There's a bunch of bad sours out there."

Yes, there are.

I've been to some wonderful breweries, places with beers I otherwise adore, where my reaction to their sours is: "Tastes like a mistake." At other breweries, I land in the "not my favorite, but sort of drinkable" realm. I'm never going to love this style. Cartledge says that's fine — people who explore a bit and still don't like sours are going to save themselves a bunch of money.

Your big takeaway here: Don't judge sours by any one brewery's offerings. The style is just too varied and individualized for that. I was pleasantly surprised by some of the beers Cartledge poured, and you might be, too, if you try the sours at several breweries and stop in at beer bars likely to carry versions from around the U.S. and beyond. Soon after you'll know whether you've picked up that sour craving.

Humboldt's most dependable sources of locally brewed sours are Redwood Curtain in Arcata, which always has at least three or four on tap, and at Humboldt Regeneration in McKinleyville, which right now has six of them. Now and then, some other local breweries roll out a sour, too. To sample a good smattering of sour beer styles made elsewhere, try Dead Reckoning Tavern in Arcata, which always offers at least a couple, or The Local, which usually has around five on tap, and many more bottles in its cooler.

A Date With Beer

May 16-22: You're still not too late to celebrate American Craft Beer Week with all-day "hoppy hours" continuing through Sunday at Mad River Brewery in Blue Lake.

Thursday, May 19 — Need more ballast? Sail on to a Ballast Point tap takeover at Dead Reckoning Tavern, where roughly 10 beers from the San Diego brewery will be on tap from 2 p.m.

Saturday, May 21 — History sizzles with the Redwood Coast up in Smoke barbecue and beer tasting at Redwood Acres, benefitting the Clarke Historical Museum. More than a dozen different barbecue masters, both amateur and professional, will grill ribs and chicken in a judged competition, and at least six breweries will be pouring. The 11:30-a.m.-to-5 p.m. event includes all you can taste and all you can sip for $30. Food only, for ages 5 to 20, is $15 and kids under 5 get in free. A kid zone is planned for this family friendly afternoon.

Wednesday, May 25 — Taste four sours from a famed Belgian brewery on Cantillon sour night at The Local Beer Bar. Seating begins at 5 p.m. and is limited to 23 people. $50 for four 6-ounce pours. Yes, really. A sign-up sheet for reservations is at the bar.

June — The snip and sip folks are doing it again, with the second annual "Beer for Balls" at Six Rivers Brewery to raise money for Nor Cal Pet Rescue's spay and neuter effort. The brewery will donate $1 from every Hammond Trail Cream Ale and specialty spay cocktail to making sure those pets aren't reproducing wantonly when we're not looking. The big finale comes on Saturday, June 25 with a dog-friendly party and raffle.

Tuesday, June 14 — Beer is nature's way of telling us to be creative, so bring your artistic spirit to Paint Night at Lost Coast Brewery. The class runs from 6 to 8 p.m. for $35.

Saturday, June 25 — Think Emerald, not Bermuda, for "Summer in the Triangle," a party that will sprawl out from the Eel River taproom into the beer garden and parking areas beyond. The 2-to-6-p.m. celebration, kicking off Eel River's 21st year, features music from Ishi Dube and two other reggae bands, a family area including a tie dye booth, and at least one newly released beer, along with Eel River favorites. ●

Thesis Pieces

Dell'Arte's three-year plan

By Pat Bitton

frontrow@northcoastjournal.com

Incoming MFA students at Dell'Arte embark on a journey that takes them from learning physical awareness and responsiveness, voice, movement, improvisation and ensemble play, to using those techniques toward character, adaptation and tragedy projects, and eventually to an internship with the Dell'Arte Company. Along the way, they undertake a week-long rural residency, a community-based arts project, a touring original ensemble performance and, finally, their thesis projects.

As North Coast residents, we have a unique yearly opportunity to witness the evolution of the next generation of theatrical performers, and the Thesis Festival gives us a look through the keyhole at the potential for these talented performers from all around the world. When the students imbue their own cultures (this year's graduates represent 10 countries) with Dell'Arte's culture of theatre-of-place, the results are intriguing, magical and rewarding in so many ways.

For the class of 2016, the Thesis Festival ends its run this week at Blue Lake's Carlo Theatre over a pair of two-night sessions: Thursday and Friday, and Saturday and Sunday, May 19-22. Each project stands alone and runs about 45 minutes, so you can pick and choose, or experience all five. All performances are pay-what-you-can and are suitable for ages 15 and up.

In The Trenches (Thursday and Saturday) was created by Jared Mongeau and is performed by Mongeau with guests Dustin Allen and Linus Winberg. Three clown soldiers find themselves in the trenches of World War I, with no idea what they're supposed to be doing. Their general has gone missing, along with their buddy Frank. Both eventually return to the bunker but not in the form in which they left. Chaos gradually descends as the trio is left to their own devices — which include wet and dry socks, tin helmets, a mop and a gun — and the all-too-frequent refrain “may he rest in pieces.” It’s an entertaining piece that had the full-house audience roaring with laughter, but it could have used a firmer editor’s hand to shorten the run time by at least a third.

In Tea Time (Thursday and Saturday), we meet two comrades (Buba Basishvili and Yan Christian Collazo), who are serving life sentences under a watchful red “eye in the sky” that is reminiscent of the menacing bouncing ball in the classic British TV series The Prisoner. Their hopeful imaginations — stylized tea parties, fantastical dances and, of course, ever more unrealistic search for “the place where freedom starts” — are their only means to retain what is left of their sanity. They are forever condemned to fight against a power they cannot see but to which they must always eventually submit. It’s a powerful and effective portrayal of a confinement in which “it is prohibited to forget.”

Happyland (Thursday and Saturday) is part poetry, part reality show, part Alice in Wonderland meets The Addams Family by way of Cabaret, and a whole bundle of fun. Suzy the Smasher (Grace Booth, resplendent in multiple shades of shocking pink) is fighting her 500th match as the top female wrestler — when she’s not playing lovelorn dirges on her violin. Her unlikely opponent is the seemingly mild and equally lovelorn Charlie (Vida Tayebati), a poet who is looking to avenge “all the men whose women left them with nothing.” The whole crazy show is emceed by the Travolta-esque Ray “The Fish” Smith (Tone Haldrup Lorenzen), for whom fighting, tears, love (requited or not) and drinking are all part of life’s rich tapestry because, after all, the show must go on.

A Feeble-minded Mayhem (Friday and Sunday) takes us inside an isolated world of shadows and make-believe inhabited by three women who have been rejected from society for their distinctly antisocial tendencies. Created and performed by Erin Johnston, Kate Tobie and guest Brittny Rebhuhn, it’s an absurdist piece that reflects humankind’s continuing tendency to impose on others what we fear in ourselves and then shut it away so we can pretend it does not exist. Left alone, the women play out their delusional fantasies until reality comes crashing in. The performers make excellent use of perspectives, shadow play and illusion to draw us into the women’s ever more grotesque universe of peel-off crocodile tears, gigantic lipsticks and a piranha.

Quo (Friday and Sunday) is perhaps the most challenging of the five pieces. Created and performed by Robi Arce, Yiouli Archontaki and guest Stella Evangelia, it presents three bandaged and zombie-like creatures who observe the world by removing their eyes and placing them in the palms of their hands. They are trapped in a world where there is no logic, caught in a time loop that prevents them from ever moving beyond the now — until time begins to run out. Dependent on each other, they must work together to make the connections that will let them escape before it’s too late, because “we will never forgive those who forget.”

Upcoming

Get swept up in Reefer Madness: the Musical at North Coast Repertory Theatre from May 19 through June 18. Inspired by the 1936 propaganda film, the singing satire features wholesome young folks pulled into a web of weed. 442-6278 www.ncrt.net

The Sound of Silence

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

It's the first official weekend with most of HSU's students out of town. Many of us (underemployed alumni ourselves) get to breathe a sigh of snobbish relief. Arcata returns to normal — whatever the hell that means — and we are spared the constant reminder of how innocent and carefree our lives used to be before getting crushed by the cynical weight of the adult world in which our optimism vanished along with our financial aid checks.

Businesses feel the pinch around town as there are fewer consumers to frequent their establishments, and I doubt us working stiffs pick up the slack.

Then there are the music venues and bands. As mentioned in one of my first columns, I don't doubt that the exodus of students has an effect on venues and bands up here, but I'm also not entirely convinced it's as large as some think. It definitely can't help to have thousands of potential showgoers leave town, but how much of local venues' clientele are HSU students?

I seemed to notice — or convince myself — that a lot of students packed the music shows I went to when I was an HSU student. That's to say, if you're a student and in a band, there's a good chance you're telling and pulling other students to your shows.

Keep playing around town for years after graduation and you'll probably start pulling less of the student crowd. Maybe it's because you have less in common with the youth, maybe their music tastes are pretty different, maybe it's because many students are under 21 and can't hit the bar scene, or maybe your band just sucks and there are only so many Class of '94 alum around to drink to your band's caterwauling. Either way, expect some bands to hang back to do some recording and writing during the summer "dry months," but also head out to support those that keep gigging just for us world-weary music lovers.

Royal Jelly Live plays Friday, May 20 at 9:30 p.m. at Humboldt Brews.

Friday

Recently onstage with The Chieftains in Arcata, locals A Company of Voices will be performing twice this weekend for you. Ranging from classical, jazz, and spiritual, you'll hear these voices at the Morris Graves Museum of Art at 7 p.m., bring $10 to get in the door.

Not exactly a live performance, but it seems worth mentioning after last week's column: The Arcata Theatre Lounge will be screening Prince's Purple Rain at 8 p.m. I don't see how that won't be a great time. $5 cover to pay your purple respects.

Local four-piece Money will be recreating the Pink Floyd sound before the backup singers, additional musicians and lasers (mainly because they can't afford them) at Cher-Ae-Heights Casino for free at 9 p.m.

If the Floyd sound is a bit too contemporary for you, Humboldt Brews is the spot to be. At 9:30 p.m. hear S.F.'s Royal Jelly Jive bring the "old-school throwback sounds of the 1940s" with a twist of rock, funk and soul jive. $15 for these pre and postwar sounds.

Saturday

Missed A Company of Voices at the Morris Graves last night? You can catch 'em at 2 p.m. Same deal as yesterday.

John Prine's right-hand man, Jason Wilber, will be at The Old Steeple in Ferndale at 7:30 p.m. The press release states that he plays guitar and sings for John Prine which is indubitably a pretty high honor. It then goes on and on about John Prine — somewhat understandably — before mentioning that he [Jason] is more than just John Prine's guy, to which I say, "then don't mention John Prine so much." Anyway, you know Jason can play guitar like a pro, but he's also a very accomplished songwriter, so go to the show, it's only $25. If you're still on the fence, did I mention he plays with John Prine?

Power-rock trio GrooveSession hits up Humboldt Brews at 9:30 p.m. With a sound influenced by soul, jam-rock and old-school funk, you know it'll be a sweaty good time. $10 cover charge, and save some money for beer.

For the late-night good times, head to the Alibi at 11 p.m. If memory serves, Ian of the Alibi will even travel himself to hear Jenny Don't & the Spurs' "lonely, Western, desert-type music" or "Texas two-step, or something" (description h/t to Dieter). Lucky for him — and us — no significant traveling will be necessary as the band will be joined at the Alibi by local high-altitude-desert rockers Opossum Sun Trail. Only $5 for this sonic-cinematic quest to Morricone's peyote-desert plateau.

Sunday

Get your groove on every Sunday at The Jam in Arcata with the Deep Groove Society, which spins your ears and shakes your ass at 9 p.m.

Tuesday

You'll find Buddy Reed doing his thing over at Libation off the Arcata Plaza at 7 p.m. As usual, he's not asking for your money (but feel free to give him some).

Richard's Goat Tavern and Tea Room hosts Pony Time from Seattle. The band has apparently released a new album entitled Rumours 2: The Rumours Are True in the style of "Fleetwood Mac's classic album, replacing the copious amounts of cocaine with Gatorade and tumultuous love affairs with trips to Arby's." So there's that, for what it's worth. The same release states that the band brings the garage rock sound but leaves behind the "bonehead bro attitude." Got it? No word on the time or cover charge, but rumor has it that it'll be in the evening and not too expensive.

Wednesday

Out-of-town band Edge of the West is celebrating the release of a new album at Humboldt Brews at 9 p.m. A blend of country roots, rock 'n' roll and jam-band sounds, expect to move around and have a good time. $10 to get in, and check out their new release. ●

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Andy Powell is a congenital music lover and hosts The Night Show on KWPT 100.3 FM weeknights at 6 p.m. HSU still hits him up for money.

Stand and Deliver

When TED talks, people listen.

The fourth annual TEDxHumboldtBay takes the stage Sunday, May 22 at 1 p.m. at the Arcata Theatre Lounge ($20). A dozen local presenters — including poets, artists, a yoga instructor, a theater maker, a data lover and a teacher — will share personal experiences on this year's theme: "Incite > Insight."

For the uninitiated, TED talks are short, well-crafted presentations, often with videos and props, in which people share their concepts and world views, often with the intent to inspire change for the greater good. According to www.ted.com, "TED (technology, entertainment and design) is a nonprofit devoted to spreading ideas." The entity created an offshoot called TEDx, with the "x" standing for "independently organized events," for a TED-like experience in places like Humboldt. And Humboldt is chock-full of people with ideas.

2016 TedxHumboldtBay presenter Matt Cendejas says, "An objective of my talk is to share the legacy of inspiration, because inspiration doesn't end when a conversation is over. Inspiration is a legacy that continues to motivate people for years." This Sunday, see what Cendejas and others see. You may walk away with your own TEDx presentation percolating. And that's the idea.

Crowning Around

The Ball is in Arcata's court — the one named for a turnip-like vegetable, that is. This Saturday, May 21 at 7 p.m., the Arcata Community Center hosts one of Humboldt's grandest (and ka-ray-ziest) parties benefiting its grandest annual event. The 2016 Rutabaga Ball ($10, $7 if you bring your own cup), the royal counterpart to the Grand Kinetic Championship, gets the glory going a week before the three-day race and gives us our Rutabaga Queen.

Contestants vying for the crown compete in three rounds: Ball Gown, Water Crossing and "Talent." Talent is loosely defined as indicated by the use of quotations. Playful irreverence is the order of things. Creativity counts, as does entourage enthusiasm. The louder the audience screams for contestants, the more it impresses the judges (past and forever Queens), since the ability to whip up participation is deemed a very Queenly quality. That, and knowing how and with what to bribe (so we've heard).

This year's contestants are: Lady Lasagna, Baron von Snooz, Princess Candie, Sparkle Lumina, April Shower, Mr. Mustachio and Venus Verde. There is no age or gender requirement to run for Rutabaga Queen; this is the Kinetic Universe, after all. The only rule to rule is that the fun is the law of the land. Join emcees Amy and Cliff Berkowitz, and Queen Lotta Paintbuckets, who organized the sparkling spectacle, in the revelry. Libations by Mad River Brewery, specialty cocktails by the Queens and live music by Lizzy and the Moonbeams keep the fun alive. By order of the court.

The strength of small stories

By John J. Bennett

Reviews

A HOLOGRAM FOR THE KING. The Tom Hanks of bygone days, of The Money Pit (1986) and Dragnet (1987) and The 'Burbs (1989), the long-suffering every-man with impeccable comic timing and no luck whatsoever, is a Hanks we likely will not see again. That Hanks existed in a specific point in cultural and commercial time. The movies he enlivened back then probably wouldn't make it to production today without the addition of a spring break backdrop or a kooky "grown-ups getting high" riff. But as his formidable career has progressed, particularly in the last decade, he has chosen some Very Mature projects. One can't fault the guy for aging on screen, for growing up, really, but some of the later-period work has felt so pointedly of a certain age as to be distancing — often too general and broad, too intentionally emotionally adult, to feel authentic or immediate, such as Larry Crowne (2011) and Extreme- ly Loud and Incredibly Close (2011). But he's also taken on tougher stuff, like the nerve-janglingly honest Captain Phillips (2013) and the ... difficult to describe Cloud Atlas (2012). So clearly Hanks hasn't decided to stop challenging himself as an artist. It seems he's been trying to say something real and relatable, maybe even personal (he is a Baby Boomer from Concord, after all). So maybe I shouldn't have been surprised to find A Hologram for the King surprising. Hanks is re-teaming with Cloud Atlas co-director Tom Tykwer — he of Run Lola Run (1998) — so there was already the promise of thematic weirdness and visual flourishes. And the story concerns a divorced corporate shill with one last chance at salvaging his career, which dovetails nicely with much of Hanks' recent work. Maybe it's the weirdness balancing the candor as well as it does, opening the movie to vulnerability and legitimate emotional maturity, that took me by surprise. Alan Clay (Hanks), on the rough side of an economic downturn and a nasty divorce, finds himself on a flight to Saudi Arabia with all his hopes pinned to a pitch. A former executive haunted by his decision to outsource his company's production to China, unable to pay the college tuition he has promised his daughter, burdened by a cyst growing on his back, Clay has a lot on his mind. Almost by accident, he lands a job selling IT to the king of Saudi Arabia for a city that hasn't yet been built. Ill-prepared for the cultural and professional atmosphere of the kingdom, Clay finds the job more daunting than expected. Aided by his alluring but troubled doctor (Sarita Choudhury) and a goofy driver (Alexander Black), Clay navigates potential physical and emotional collapse while spinning the plates of international business.

A Hologram for the King is satisfying and effective largely because it is so unassuming. It would be easy for the characters to get lost in a vast narrative set against such a tremendous backdrop, but Hanks and Tykwer (who adapted the screenplay from Dave Eggers' novel) don't let that happen. Instead, the movie is alive and intimate; Clay's problems feel real, and all the less manageable for it. Too often we conflate maturity with oldness, when really we are talking about wisdom and emotional intelligence. A Hologram for the King is mature in a good and substantive way. R. 97M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

MONEY MONSTER. The trailers for Jodie Foster's latest directorial effort cast it as an indictment of Wall Street, and on some level it is. But it is also a much smaller thing: almost a thriller, with heart and immediacy upheld by strong performances.

Lee Gates (George Clooney) hosts a cartoonish, wildly popular stock tip show on a 24-hour cable news network. On the eve of his director Patty Fenn's (Julia Roberts) secretive departure to another network, the show is hijacked by an armed man named Kyle Budwell (Jack O'Connell). Kyle forces Lee into an explosive vest, alleging that one of Lee's bum stock tips cost him his life savings. As the situation unfolds, we learn that a lot of people lost a lot of money on that tip. The company's CEO, Walt Camby (Dominic West) calls it a "glitch," to the tune of $800 million. There is more to the situation than he cares to reveal, though, and as Lee attempts to talk Kyle down, Patty and her team dig for the truth, all on live television.

Obviously this is a takedown of big finance, but it succeeds because it makes the story smaller, starting from the tight focus of one frustrated working man's desperation and gradually pulling back to reveal the greed and machinations that cost him everything. Money Monster, while perhaps putting a too-shiny bow on things in the end, refuses to back down from some tough moments. R. 98M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF NADINE A. CHRISTIAN CASE NO. PR160144

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, NADINE A. CHRISTIAN A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner, CRAIG HANNA In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that CRAIG HANNA be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority. A HEARING on the petition will be held on June 16, 2016 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 8. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law. YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call the trustee's information line at 530-246-2727 or visit this Internet Web site: calforeclosures.biz, using the file number assigned to this case: TS #16-2256. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. Date:

Field Notes

The Good Old Days?

By Barry Evans
fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Hiroshima, Japan, 1945, after its destruction by the first of only two atomic bombs used in warfare.
Public domain

Writing about 700 BC, the Greek poet Hesiod waxed nostalgic for "the good old days" as he imagined them: "They lived as if they were gods, their hearts free from all sorrow ... The fruitful grainland yielded its harvest to them of its own accord." In reality, his — and our — good old days sucked. Whether we're talking in terms of decades, centuries or millennia, any comparison between life now and life then overwhelmingly favors the former; we're far, far better off now than ever. Consider:

This country was built on the two great evils of genocide (of indigenous people) and slavery (of Africans). Lynching was a fact of Southern life less than 100 years ago, while "progressive" Theodore Roosevelt got away with saying, "I don't go so far as to think the only good Indians are dead Indians, but I believe nine out of ten are." Today we have an African-American President and (taking a local example) the Yurok and Karuk tribes are leading players in undamming the Klamath River.

The U.S. murder rate is 1/30 what it was in Middle Ages Europe. According to the U.S. Department of Justice, in 1980, it was 10.2 per 100,000 people annually; by 2010, the U.S. murder rate had fallen to 4.7 per 100,000.

In 1900, infectious diseases caused half of all deaths in the U.S.; today it's less than 3 percent. The average lifespan of a baby born here in 1900 was 47; today it's 77, according to University of California Berkley Department of Demography. And Oxford University economist Max Roser (author of Our World in Data) says the global population living in what the World Health Organization defines as "extreme poverty" decreased from 44 to 10 percent between 1981 and 2015.

War deaths have massively declined. The first half of the twentieth century saw tens of millions of world war deaths; by the second half, that was down to millions in superpower "proxy wars"; in this century, our worst wars, such as in Iraq and Syria, kill hundreds of thousands. Nuclear weapons haven't been used since 1945. In contrast with the good old days, we expect that the great powers will settle their differences peaceably.

Despite the brutally high, racially-biased incarceration rates in this country, we've come a long way from old-time punishment. Here's how Assyrian king Ashurnasirpal (884-859 BC) dealt with rebels: "I flayed all the chiefs who had revolted ... Some I impaled upon the pillar on stakes ... Some I cut off their noses, ears and fingers; of many I put out their eyes ..."

The land stewardship of "nobel savages," as philosopher Jean-Jacques Rousseau's called our indigenous ancestors, is sometimes compared to our ravaging of the environment, but those so-called gentle people hunted mammoths, dodos and moas to extinction, turned the Valley of Mexico into a dustbowl and chopped down all the trees in Iceland and on Easter Island.

Whence our predilection to romanticize the past and condemn the present? Two (of many) reasons: our 24/7 "if it bleeds, it leads" news feeds keep death and destruction in our awareness; and we're genetically programmed to pay more attention to negative than to positive data (better to assume that rustling in the tall grass is a sabertooth tiger, even if it turns out to be the wind).

Of course we've got overwhelming challenges: climate change, overpopulation, environmental devastation, resource scarcity, ocean acidification, a billion people still living in poverty, instability in the Middle East and elsewhere. But talk of those good old days is a canard. On average, humans have never been healthier, more prosperous, long-lived, peaceful or democratic.

As political philosopher Leif Wenar put it, "The world now is a thoroughly awful place compared with what it should be. But not compared with what it was." ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) never thought he'd see gay marriage become the law of the land in his lifetime.
